Appealing to the government to take a pragmatic approach to the coronavirus lockdown rules, business lobby group Confederation of Indian Industry on Tuesday suggested changes that the government could implement to ease hardships faced by households and businesses.

The suggestions include relaxation of social distancing norms for the information technology (IT) and business process outsourcing industry, allowing courier services to operate and permitting self-employed people such as electricians, plumbers and mechanics to carry out their trade as they provide essential services availed by both households and commercial establishments.
